Spatial Distribution of Population of Different Socio-Cultural Entities within Chandernagore Municipal Corporation Area

Basudev Halder

Assistant Professor, Department of Geography, Sarat Centenary College, Dhaniakhali, Hooghly, W.B.

Abstract: Urban settlement always attracts people from the surrounding areas as well as from different parts of the country depending on the socio-economic criteria of that urban centre. Urbanisation in the modern world flourished along with the industrial revolution. The wave from the European industrial revolution largely hit different parts of India too. A new set of towns emerged along with European traders cum rulers. These towns attracted people having different languages, religions, caste, etc., but common inertia found among themselves that they had unitedly lived in towns with a unique identity related to that soil. So the town like Chandernagore Municipal Corporation has always followed the same legacy and remained as a bouquet with different flowers of social, cultural entities. The spatial distribution of these people within this town is always determined by specific socialcultural reasons.
